Annual Conference 2008: Building the Connection

by Suzy Keenan*

1,200 clergy and lay representatives of the 465 churches of The Eastern Pennsylvania Conference of The United Methodist Church will gather together on Thursday, May 29 and Friday, May 30 in Philadelphia.

The Conference will celebrate the theme, “Living Connected as God’s People: Building the Connection” through worship, music, and Holy Conferencing under the leadership of Bishop Marcus Matthews.

Shortened to one and a half days, the conference will be packed with dynamic worship led by Dr. Marcia McFee. Dr. McFee will design and lead the five worship experiences at the upcoming annual conference and will invite people to engage the arts in worship. She is renowned around the globe for her creative and deeply spiritual worship leading, she will also design and lead the worship experiences at the upcoming General Conference of The United Methodist Church, in Ft. Worth, Texas, April 23 to May 2. She has been a worship leader at various United Methodist gatherings around the globe.

Annual Conference will begin at 1:45 on Thursday, May 29 with Opening Devotions, Building the Connection: God’s Reign. Opening Worship, on Thursday evening at 7:00 pm, will feature a colorful procession, inspiring music, and the preaching of Bishop J. Lawrence McCleskey.

In addition to being resident bishop of the Western North Carolina Conference, Bishop McCleskey represents the Council of Bishops on the denomination’s General Board of Higher Education and Ministry. He is vice-president of that board and chair of its Division of Higher Education. He is vice-president of the University Senate of The United Methodist Church. Bishop McCleskey also served as president of the board of directors of the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, where he was also a professor of church music.

Dr. Marcia McFee To Lead Worship At Annual Conference

Vital and passionate worship consistently tops the list of priorities for churches across the conference. Dr. Marcia McFee, a national worship leader and educator, will bring that vitality to worship when Annual Conference convenes on May 29. While her ministry takes various forms, including pastor’s schools, seminary coursework, regional workshops and local church consultations, leading and designing worship for Annual Conferences is some of the most fulfilling work she says she is privileged to do. “This work embodies my own sense of call: building up the church and its leaders through education and inspiration, strengthening the Body of Christ for the work we must do in the world.” Her presence in Eastern Pennsylvania will mark her 35th in Annual Conference worship leadership.

Annual Conference worship contains what Marcia calls the “3 Rs.” From...

General Conference delegation recommends two candidates for Bishop

Melinda L. McKonly

Melinda (Mindy) L. McKonly is appointed to Senior Pastor, Asbury UMC, Allentown, PA (2000-present).

Describe three of your gifts for ministry and explain how you would employ these gifts as a Bishop.

I believe I have the gift of Leadership. I am the oldest of five children in my family, all girls. As the oldest, I have always been the one to see what needed to be done and to strategize ways to accomplish it. I have led congregations, small ones that couldn't see beyond survival and large ones that needed to be motivated to change the way they viewed ministry. I have assumed many leadership roles in the Annual Conference, from Camping to Finance to Ordained Ministry. My passion has been my work with the General Board of Global Ministries and the Conference Committee on Mission Personnel.

As a Bishop, I see the need to help set the direction for the Church and to keep the goals and the vision before the Conference. I believe that clergy and laity alike truly desire to be Christ's body in the world. The Episcopal leader helps to enable that to happen by empowering people for ministry and through the appointment of leaders. A strong component of leadership needed in the church is accountability. Jesus said that we will be held accountable one day for our actions. I think we need to be evaluated in our ministry for the results that are accomplished now as well.

I have the gift of compassion. I suppose there are some who have been on the receiving end of being held accountable who might not agree with that. But I see myself as a human being with all the faults and limitations that entails, and therefore have compassion, empathy and grace for others. The greatest compliment I have received in my ministry has been from people who say they can talk to me because I am real.

Leadership without compassion can become tyrannical. Along with compassion is a sense of passion for those who suffer because of injustice or hardship or oppression. As a Bishop that sense of compassion can fuel prophetic leadership in the church.

Discernment is also one of my gifts for ministry. Some might just call this intuition, but I believe that the Spirit enables those with this gift to see below the surface, to see the truth that lies within. Discernment is not just knowing all at once, but a process of listening both with the car and the heart.

This is a great gift for dealing with people one-on-one or seeking the direction in which God might be calling the Church. The downside of this gift is in acting without getting confirmation from others or in judging before one has all the facts. For this reason, I believe it is essential for a Bishop to build a team in which people feel free to express their opinions even when they differ with the Bishop.

Please keep Michele and Mindy in your prayers.

Michele Wright Bartlow

Michele Wright Bartlow is appointed to Senior Pastor, First UMC of Germantown, Philadelphia, PA

Describe three of your gifts for ministry and explain how you would employ these gifts as a Bishop.

Consensus. I am a good bridge-builder, mediating and encouraging dialogue between people of diverse opinions. As bishop, it would be important not to surround myself only with people who agreed with me. I've had lots of experience in dealing with conflict and am comfortable with it. In fact, within the framework of our mission and ministry, I believe it’s important to find lay and clergy leaders who will contribute something substantive to the conversation that wouldn't be there if they were not there. My goal is to continue to build bridges, to help others to talk through differences about matters of conviction.

Vision. One of my strengths in ministry is that I am able to ask the larger questions - the “balcony view”. I can look at a particular cultural context from a church and discipleship perspective. In ministry, I work from informed intuition, practicing an intuitive discernment, establishing a good sense of the open and urgent questions, affirming people, and developing strategies for working. Spiritual discernment asks: what is it that God wants us to do? What is the heart of God? If we believe God really wants something from us in this situation, then our spiritual task is to articulate what we believe that is. As bishop, this ability to discern and approach our spiritual mission strategically would be invaluable. It would enable vision to be translated into measurable outcomes.

Motivation. Most of my pastoral experience has enabled me to resource congregational leadership: asking what these particular disciples want to accomplish and how they see their role in the church, and then equipping them to carry out the mission. I encourage people to take ownership of their faith and to work together toward a common goal. In this same way I believe I could motivate pastors and lay persons, because I have already done it in a variety of settings.

The General Conference Delegation voted on Saturday, March 29 to recommend two clergy candidates for endorsement for the Episcopacy: Melinda L. McKonly and Michele Wright Bartlow. These two nominees will be recommended to the Eastern Pennsylvania Annual Conference in May for endorsement, at which time the conference will vote on endorsement of these candidates. If they are endorsed, then they will be official Episcopal nominees for the Northeastern Jurisdictional Conference. Bishops will be elected at the Northeastern Jurisdictional Conference when it meets July 14-18, 2008 in Harrisburg, PA. For more information: www.nejumc.org

U.S. state efforts advance to abolish death penalty

Jesus: No one is beyond redemption

The death penalty denies the power of Christ to redeem, restore and transform all human beings.

by Kathy L. Gilbert

In 1988, Kirk Bloodsworth was convicted of rape and murder and sent to Maryland's death row. In 1993, DNA testing proved he was innocent.

He joined the 175 people in the United States who have been released from death rows after being found innocent of the capital crime for which they were convicted.

"Because innocent persons are sentenced to death and because there is documented racial and geographical bias, everyone should question the death penalty," said Beth Reilly, a United Methodist working to abolish capital punishment in Maryland.

Reilly's convictions come from Scripture and The United Methodist Church's Social Principles.

"For United Methodists, a death penalty is antithetical to the New Testament message," she said. "As our state seeks to punish perpetrators of heinous crimes and it works to protect society from those who may do harm, we, as Christians, must consider a higher calling.

In the United Methodist law book, called the Book of Discipline, the denomination states that "the death penalty denies the power of Christ to redeem, restore and transform all human beings." It goes on to state opposition to the death penalty and to "urge its elimination from all criminal codes."

Delegates to the 1996 Methodist General Conference took the historic action of officially opposing the death penalty.

Each Methodist and United Methodist General Conference since that time has reaffirmed that position. Meeting every four years, these assemblies are the only bodies that can speak officially for the denomination. The 2008 General Conference will meet April 23-May 2 in Fort Worth, Texas.

Making strides

"Tremendous strides were made in the past year against capital punishment, according to Bill Mefford, director of civil and human rights with the United Methodist Board of Church and Society, the church's social advocacy agency.

"New Jersey became the first state in 42 years to legislatively end the death penalty," he said. Abolitionist legislation also was filed in Colorado, Maryland, Montana, Nebraska and New Mexico.

The number of executions in the United States hit a 133-year low in 2007 with 42 people being executed, due in large part to a challenge from two Kentucky death row inmates. The U.S. Supreme Court agreed to hear the challenge in September. The inmates allege lethal injection is cruel and unusual punishment.

Mefford noted three more exonerations: Curtis McCarty of Oklahoma after 21 years on death row; Michael Lee McCormick of Tennessee after 16 years; and Jonathan Hoffman of North Carolina after 10 years.

The United States reinstated the death penalty in 1976 and since that time 1,099 people have been executed. Lethal injection is used in 15 states and by the U.S. military and U.S. government. Nine states use electrocution, five states use the gas chamber, two states execute by hanging and two states use a firing squad. Lethal injection is allowed as an alternative in most states.

California, North Carolina and Tennessee are currently studying their death penalty process, according to the Death Penalty Information Center. Indiana is considering legislation that would exempt seriously mentally ill defendants.

The Nation in Brief

When New Jersey repealed the death penalty at the end of 2007, United Methodists were among those who squealed into a small room at the state capitol to watch Gov. Jon Corzine sign the bill. As the governor noted at the time, grassroots advocacy groups had played a significant role in making New Jersey the first state since 1976 to repeal the death penalty through its legislature. Replacing capital punishment was the sentence of life in prison without parole. Among the groups he acknowledged was New Jerseyans for Alternatives to the Death Penalty, which had both direct and indirect United Methodist participation, according to John Goodwin, co-chairperson of the denomination's New Jersey Area Task Force on Abolishing the Death Penalty.

While the object of "Jeopardy!" is to guess the right question, it was the answers of 17-year-old contestant Becky Kralle that left the biggest impression during a Feb. 14 appearance on the nationally syndicated TV game show. Becky, who already had pledged to put 10 percent of her earnings in the offering plate at Chews United Methodist Church, was given two chances to share her Christian faith in the form of answers to host Alex Trebek's questions. Becky said witnessing to the faith was "a natural thing to do." Although Becky didn't win her round on the game show, she did tithe $500 from the $5,000 she was guaranteed for appearing on the show.

While professing U.S. membership continues to decline in The United Methodist Church, the number of constituents is steadily increasing, according to new denominational statistics. Membership decreased by eight-tenths of a percent over a one-year period to more than 7.9 million, according to the United Methodist General Council on Finance and Administration. Worldwide United Methodist lay and clergy membership, which stood at more than 11.5 million in 2005, is still being tallied for 2006 and is expected to be released later this year. Meanwhile, the number of constituents in 2006 was more than 5.5 million, a 16 percent increase from a decade ago. Denominational records show the number of constituents has increased three of the last five years and eight of the last 10. "Constituents are the unbaptized children, youth and adults who are not members of the church, but for whom the church has pastoral responsibility," said Scott Brewer, the council's director of research. "It's a growing number, and it reflects that people aren't so big into membership any more."

The African Methodist Episcopal Church has withdrawn its support of a resolution affirming full communion with the other denominations in the Pan-Methodist Commission, and it is reconsidering having representatives on United Methodist agencies. Speaking at the March 6-8 meeting of the Pan-Methodist Commission, Bishop Earl McCloud, the ecumenical officer for the AME Church, said the withdrawal was based on a series of events, primarily those that led up to the dismissal of the Rev. Larry Pickens as leader of The United Methodist Church's ecumenical agency.

Gracehamburg Church, Tipp City, Ohio, has attained "mega-church" status, with multiple buildings and ministries on two campuses serving about 4,500 people weekly since the Rev. Mike Slaughter was assigned there 29 years ago. Membership stands at 1,500. The church's ministries now extend far beyond Ohio. Through its Sudan Project, undertaken in partnership with the United Methodist Committee on Relief, "we are reaching or touching a quarter million people in Darfur," the Rev. Mike Slaughter said. Slaughter spoke about that project—which has raised $3 million in three years—during the spring meeting of the United Methodist Board of Global Ministries, UMCOR's parent agency, March 19-21 in Stamford, Conn.
Retired Liberian clergy eke out survival on pensions

The Rev. Joeloe Vah, a retired United Methodist minister, lives in a burned-out house with 17 relatives. UMNS photos by Kathy L. Gilbert.

The Rev. Joeloe Vah, his mother and 16 other relatives live in a house that would be condemned by U.S. standards. The home was heavily damaged and looted by rebels during Liberia’s long civil war, and now it stands as a burned-out shell.

Vah, 78, who retired from active ministry in 2002, was a United Methodist pastor for 53 years. He has no money to repair the damage to his home caused by fire, bullets, water and weather. Receiving no income other than a quarterly pension of US$60, he and his family subsist on rice, soup made from a local nut and items they receive from others.

His grandchildren reside with him in Buchanan so they can attend school in town. “They live in the rural area and have no means of transportation and no means to go to school, so most have to be here in the city to go to school,” he says. He also cares for his elderly mother, who is in poor health.

“The only income coming in is from the Board of Pension,” he says, referring to the United Methodist Board of Pension and Health Benefits. “That buys just a bag of rice to sustain the rest of the family,” he says, of the hundred-pound bag that sometimes lasts a month. “The pension is not enough to sustain me and my family,” he says. “With the funds given to us by the Board of Pension, we purchase the rice and keep it in the room where I sleep, because I can’t keep it in the kitchen.”

Which is outside under a roofed structure. When he was an active pastor, a small side business helped him to support his family. Since retiring, he says, “I don’t have any money like before from the business when I was active. I rely only on the Board of Pension.”

Offering hope

Stories like Vah’s abound in Liberia. A news team from United Methodist Communications and members of the denomination’s Board of Pension visited the Liberia Annual Conference in 2005 to gain a better understanding of the pension needs in that West African country. The team visited cities outside of Monrovia, Liberia’s capital city, meeting with pastors and surviving spouses whose pension funds were minimal or nonexistent.

Many had given 20, 30 or 40 years of service to the church. The United Methodist Church, directed by its 2000 and 2004 General Conferences, has been working to develop pension models to help pastors and church lay workers in Liberia and other countries retire with an adequate pension. The church’s effort, known as the Central Conference Pension Initiative, is focusing on Africa, Eastern Europe and the Philippines.

A campaign to raise $20 million is under way to fully fund pensions for retired central conference clergy and surviving spouses. More than $4.6 million has been raised, says Chad Peddicord, the campaign director for the Board of Pension and vice president of CCS (Community Counseling Services) of New York. The initiative is led by a Central Conference Pension Committee with representatives from five church agencies: the Board of Pension and Health Benefits, General Council on Finance and Administration, Board of Global Ministries, United Methodist Publishing House and United Methodist Communications.

In November 2006, the committee selected the Liberia Conference to implement a pilot pension program for clergy and church lay workers, beginning in 2007. “This is groundbreaking and is a celebration of the church’s global nature and that we are in mission together,” says Bishop John Innis of Liberia.

For the Liberia Conference to be chosen as the pilot project in Africa is “commendable” and “falls under the umbrella of making disciples for the transformation of the world,” he says.

The World in Brief

United Methodist Bishop Edward Paup has been elected to lead the church’s Board of Global Ministries, which oversees global missions and is the denomination’s largest agency. The election came March 11 during the board’s spring meeting. He will assume the post of general secretary on Sept. 1. Until that time, Bishop Felton May will continue as the interim top executive. Paup, 62, is bishop of the Seattle area, which includes the Pacific Northwest Annual (regional) Conference and Alaska Missionary Conference, and is president of the Western Jurisdictional College of Bishops. He said he will tender his resignation from the episcopacy, effective Aug. 31, when the United Methodist Council of Bishops meets in April.

Sister Helen Prejean, the Catholic nun who has become a symbol of opposition to the death penalty, will receive the 2008 World Methodist Peace Award on April 2 in New Orleans. The Rev. John Barrett, president of the World Methodist Council and an ordained member of the British Methodist Church, will present the award. Prejean is the author of Dead Man Walking; an Eyewitness Account of the Death Penalty in the United States, which served as the basis for a 1995 movie starring Susan Sarandon and Sean Penn. The World Methodist Peace Award is presented annually to individuals or groups who have contributed significantly to peace, justice and reconciliation.

The Rev. Pamela Couture has a deep interest in peace-building efforts in the Democratic Republic of Congo and is writing a book on the topic. Couture, the vice president for academic affairs and dean at Saint Paul School of Theology in Kansas City, Missouri, was planning a research trip to the African nation in January and wondered what type of gift she could take to the people there. As a result, Saint Paul and others developed a plan to deliver more than $1.4 million worth of medicines to Congo. For helping to make the life-saving delivery a reality, the United Methodist-related seminary will present four individuals with “Good Samaritan” awards at an April 7 banquet at the Kansas City Marriott Downtown. The contributions of the Saint Paul Council and Board of Trustees will also be recognized.

Two United Methodist agencies have renewed a partnership to develop distance-education systems across Africa using satellite and radio.

The top executives of the United Methodist Board of Higher Education and Ministry and United Methodist Communications symbolically re-signed an agreement to work together to address denominational focuses on leadership development, health, poverty and comprehensiveness.

The initiative is led by a Central Conference Pension Committee with representatives from five church agencies: the Board of Pension and Health Benefits, General Council on Finance and Administration, Board of Global Ministries, United Methodist Publishing House and United Methodist Communications.

In November 2006, the committee selected the Liberia Conference to implement a pilot pension program for clergy and church lay workers, beginning in 2007. This is groundbreaking and is a celebration of the church’s global nature and that we are in mission together,” says Bishop John Innis of Liberia.

other by proclaiming and embodying the Word of God in meaningful ways. Additionally, our worship must be about renewal. Clergy and lay leaders rarely have the chance to take a deep breath and immerse themselves in worship participation without the added responsibility of leadership of that worship. At Annual Conference, we are given the chance to worship deeply and renew our spirits, our mission and our call. Finally, conference worship is filled with moments of passage—significant moments in the lives of our conference community: retirement, licensing, commissioning, ordination, memorial and, last but certainly not least, the setting of appointments when we are called once again. These services are a time for worship with ‘deep soul,’ acknowledging the ever-abiding presence of the Spirit, especially in times of transition in life and ministry.”

Dr. McFee is a graduate of Saint Paul School of Theology and Graduate Theological Union, where she received a Ph.D. in Liturgical Studies and Ethics. “I believe what we do in worship matters for who we are becoming in the world. Worship forms and shapes us, but the question is, ‘To what are we being formed?’ Through praise and prayer are we connected more deeply to God? Through proclamation of the Word are we inspired and moved to discipleship in Jesus Christ?” It is her hope that the worship she is planning for EPA Annual Conference based on the theme, Building the Connection,” will do just that—build connections for mission and ministry.

Just after Annual Conference (June 16-20), Marcia is offering a continuing education and spiritual renewal event called “Elevation” for clergy and lay worship leaders in her hometown of Lake Tahoe. It will further explore the theology, theories and practical applications modeled at Annual Conference. All leaders in churches of the Eastern Pennsylvania Conference are eligible for a discount, according to McFee. “Come and elevate your skills and understanding of vital worship in a beautiful setting with colleagues from across the connection.” A brochure and registration information are available for download at www.marciamcfee.com or by calling toll free 877-387-7977. The Hot Metal Bridge Faith Community seeks to be a bridge to Jesus Christ by helping people participate in the Kingdom of God. Its mission is to be a bridge to Jesus Christ by participating in communion, welcoming all into community, listening and having compassion, growing in faith and sharing Christ’s story with the community of the South Side community of Pittsburgh, the surrounding neighborhoods, and the world.

Hot Metal Bridge Faith Community is a church that was planted in the South Side neighborhood of Pittsburgh, fall of 2004, in a tattoo parlor. The church uses a narrative style of worship that shares the story of God through drama and the arts, as well as traditional forms of worship.

Hot Metal Bridge is part of both The United Methodist Church and the Presbyterian Church (USA). Being connected in this way points to the church’s deeper belief in the unity and priesthood of all believers. When sharing in the Lord’s Supper, all who have a heart hungry for the Gifts of God are invited to come to the table and be served; no one is turned away.

Hot Metal Bridge’s Philosophy of Worship

Jesus Loved a Good Story: Jesus taught the people the Bible in new and relevant ways.

Jesus Loved To Eat: He started out changing water into wine and in the last moments before His death shared in a meal with His friends. We too love to eat and be with friends, which is why after every service we sit down and have a meal of tacos or soup or bagels together. Through this meal, we seek to create authentic, intimate relationships with one another and with God. Communion, community and conversation are all vital elements of who we are as a church.

Jesus Loved People: Above all Jesus came to serve and love others and He expects no less from us. We seek to serve those that are in need throughout the community around us.

Pastor Jim Walker

Pastor Jim Walker is a Full Ordained Elder in The United Methodist Church. He is a graduate of Pittsburgh Theological Seminary (2003). He received his undergraduate degree from Point Park College in Pittsburgh (1991). He and co-pastor Jeff Eddings have been working together in ministry since they served together as camp counselors at Ligonier Camp in 1989. After graduating from Point Park College, they spent many years using drama to proclaim the Gospel in churches and camps across the country through a ministry called “Crosslight Productions.” They also created an outreach to elementary schools through the Pittsburgh Children’s Museum-performing plays about conflict resolution, handling peer pressure, and reading. They are now serving the Lord together again, along with their families and many, many friends at Hot Metal Bridge Faith Community on the South Side.

Jim Walker, an ordained elder in The UMC and co-pastor of Hot Metal Bridge, will share with us how this faith community goes about ministry. Birthed out of a tattoo parlor, this is definitely not your grandparents’ type of United Methodist congregation. Worship services held in the Goodwill building and Bible studies in the tattoo parlor are only glimpses of how this faith community engages people for Christ in Pittsburgh, PA. This worshipping community uses a narrative style of worship that incorporates drama and the arts, as well as traditional worship styles. Jim has a passion for the church and seeing The UMC reclaiming John Wesley’s passionate missiological approach to ministry. To see photos and learn more, go to: www.hotmetalbridge.com.

- Commentary on Pew’s U.S. Religious Landscape Survey

The release of the U.S. Religious Landscape Survey by the Pew Forum on Religion and Public Life continues to draw commentary in both the church and the mainstream press; and Lovett Weems has been asked frequently for comments and analysis. Weems was quoted in the March 7 edition of The United Methodist Newsmagazine where he noted that UM’s are vastly over-represented among whites and among families with incomes above $50,000, according to the Pew Survey. A February 29 Associated Press article also cited Weems saying that growing churches have both a clear sense of identity and meet people’s needs in a changing culture. Tips to Encourage Young People in Your Church

The United Methodist General Board of Higher Education and Ministry has developed several resources to help congregations welcome younger people and to ease the process of candidacy for younger persons exploring a call to ordained ministry. A series of tip sheets found on the “Explore Calling” website, www.explorecalling.org, provides recommendations to congregations, Boards of Ordained Ministry, and younger candidates themselves. “Young people bring unique gifts ... as a generation, and as individuals. Take the time to talk about what those gifts are and how to incorporate them into your church life,” says their tip sheet on Young People in Local Churches.

Walls of injustice continue to divide Palestine/Israel

A Commentary by Margaret Harris

My journey started in October 2006 in Nashville, when I heard Elizabeth Corrie, a United Methodist from Atlanta, tell a gathering of United Methodists the story of how her cousin, Rachel Corrie, had been crushed to death by an Israeli bulldozer three years earlier. Rachel had been protesting the demolition of a Palestinian home in the Gaza strip. I couldn’t get Rachel Corrie’s story out of my head. I wanted to learn more about the conditions that had brought about this tragedy. This inspired me to go on the January 2007 General Board of Global Ministries (GBGM) Education, Mission, and Advocacy trip to Israel/Palestine.

I was the only person from the Eastern PA Conference to journey on the trip. When I returned, I kept talking to people about the trip, encouraging them to make the journey, too. A year later, in February 2008, seven persons from the Eastern Pennsylvania Conference, including me, headed to Israel/Palestine with GBGM. There were over 90 participants from all over the world, including Germany, the Philippines, Estonia, and Kenya. The Eastern Pennsylvania Conference had the most representatives: Judy Claude, Laura Jones, Sue and Reinhard Kruse, John and Kim McGrath, and me.

The February 2008 Peace and Justice trip to Israel/Palestine was the fourth GBGM trip to Israel/Palestine under the leadership of David Wildman. Unlike most church tours of the Holy Land, which focus on visiting Biblical sites, these trips focused on getting to know the people living in the land today, particularly the Palestinian Christians, and learning about the problems they face. Most Christians are more familiar with the injustice during the Roman occupation of the Holy Land two thousand years ago than the injustice today under Israeli occupation.

Three things were remarkable above all: the wall, the destroyed Palestinian villages, and the Israeli settlements. Israel’s so-called Separation Wall confronted us as soon as we left Israel’s Ben Gurion Airport. This wall, the first major visible sign of injustice, is twice as high as the Berlin Wall in many places, and already over 400 miles long and growing daily. This wall is justified by Israel as necessary to protect Israel from Palestinian attacks. I question the validity of that.

If the reason for the wall is defense from the Palestinians, you would think that the wall would be built on the border between Israel and Palestine, but much of it is not. A lot of it is built between Palestinian land. This gives Israel illegal ownership and control of Palestinian land. Palestinian farmers thus lose their olive trees and land.

The wall does not simply separate just Israelis and Palestinians, it separates Palestinians from other Palestinians. It often surrounds Palestinian villages or Palestinian neighborhoods, isolating Palestinians in one village or neighborhood from their Palestinian neighbors. People are unable to visit their families and relatives. In Jerusalem, we saw the wall separating a neighborhood of Palestinian Christians from the Palestinian Christian elementary school, which the children attend. Sometimes it cuts right through a schoolyard, making it impossible for children to use their own school yard.

As a speaker from the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs said, “No one disputes Israel’s right to protect itself. They have every right to put a wall up on their border. But that’s not what they did. They don’t have a right to put up the wall in Palestinian territory.”

We visited Biram, one of the over 400 Palestinian villages destroyed by Israel in 1948. Our guide, Tommy Magdal, gave us a first-hand account of his experience as a child living in this Palestinian Christian village and being driven out by the Israeli army. He told a heartbreaking story of how his family, along with everyone else in the village, was forced by the Israeli army to abandon their homes and land. They were told they could return in a week. They slept outdoors for the week, awaiting permission to return. However, when they tried to come back, they found the army had destroyed their homes and were forbidden to return. They are not allowed to return today. The village remains destroyed and abandoned.

To add insult to injury, the Israeli Supreme Court ruled in favor of the villagers. However, the army overruled the Supreme Court, claiming the need for security. Strangely enough, Israel allows the former inhabitants to bury their dead in the village cemetery. The living are forbidden to return or rebuild their homes or farm their confiscated land, but the dead are allowed to return.

When it comes to Israeli settlements, you might have a picture in your mind of a few religious zealots living in primitive conditions in the desert in defiance of the Israeli government. Nothing could be further from the truth! There are over 200,000 Israelis living in settlements. Most of the settlements are luxurious modern suburban developments with shopping malls, high-rises, and swimming pools. Rather than trying to stop or limit the settlements, the Israeli government offers financial incentives to people to move to the settlements. Most settlers are secular and do not move into the settlements for religious reasons. They move to the settlements because they are cheap and convenient.

So what is the problem? The problem is that all settlements are on Palestinian land. The settlements rob the Palestinians of their land. Then, to make matters even worse, Israel restricts the Palestinians further, with the excuse of security for the settlers. A particularly egregious policy is that most of the main roads are for Israelis only. Palestinians are not allowed to use roads on their land.

Want to learn more about this situation and how you can advocate for change? There is a wonderful opportunity to learn more at the North American Friends of Sabel Conference held at Villanova at the end of April. There will also be another General Board of Global Ministries trip to Israel/Palestine in 2009. Additionally, if you can’t make it to the Sabel Conference or Israel/Palestine, come to the School of Christian Mission this summer and take the course on Israel/Palestine. Finally, members of the EPA group who went on this trip would love to tell people about our experiences. If you would like one or more of us to come to your church and talk, please contact me at mhrarris@voicenet.com.

Early Response Team training

June 6 & 7, 2008

Camp Innabah

Early Response Teams (ERTs): fill the need in the early days after a disaster to establish the presence of the church. They are neither the first response emergency workers nor the traditional VIM repair and recovery teams. Rather, these are the folks who go in and make the homes safe, sanitary and secure by mucking out, removing damaged drywall and carpeting, treating for mold, cutting up fallen trees, etc.

These teams were first created by the United Methodist Church in the mid 1990’s and they have been a cooperative effort between the United Methodist Committee on Relief (UMCOR) and the United Methodist Volunteers in Mission (UMVIM). A covenant was formed between the two groups in 2007. All ERTs must be trained by authorized UMCOR trainers and it is absolutely necessary that each member of an ERT have the basic ERT training.

Over 200 people in our conference have received an overview of ERTs in the abbreviated VIM training that was held after Hurricane Katrina. The training will be held on Friday evening and all day Saturday, June 6 & 7 at Camp Innabah. The cost will be $100 per participant which includes course materials, a light dinner on Friday evening, three meals on Saturday and overnight accommodations on Friday. The training will be conducted by three of our members who have recently been through “Train the Trainer” training and will be observed by an UMCOR trainer in order to obtain their certification. Please consider participating in this event. It is not a matter of “if” a disaster will occur but “when” it will occur.

Time: Friday, June 6 from 6:00 PM until 9:30 Saturday, June 7, all day through dinner.

Place: Camp Innabah, Spring City, PA.

Cost: $100 each.

To register, contact: Ben Botti, Eastern PA Conference VIM Coordinator, 127 Barndt Road, Sellersville, PA 18960; Phone 215-723-8957; Fax 215-723-3945; e-mail bbotti@centralnet.net.

Workshop takes worship to new heights: Marcia McFee leads “Elevation” Retreat in Lake Tahoe

Deep lake water and lofty mountains become biblical metaphors for the CEU-certified worship workshop being offered by well-known worship professor and workshop leader, Dr. Marcia McFee. The spectacular setting of Lake Tahoe and McFee’s decades of experience leading, studying and teaching worship will give 50 clergy and lay leaders involved in worship a deep experience of the theology and practice of worship.

“Elevation,” Dr. McFee’s next CEU event in Lake Tahoe, is scheduled for June 16-20, 2008. Past participants described the 5-day event as “inspirational,” “helpful,” with “so many ideas to take home and apply right away.”

A 2007 study by the General Board of Higher Education and Ministry (GBHEM) showed that 85% of Conferences in The United Methodist Church require continuing education by clergy. McFee notes, “Elevation” gives pastors and lay worship leaders CEU credits as they deepen their understanding of worship and enhance their ability to engage congregations in meaningful worship. Existing global worship resources are available and “Elevation” helps leaders to incorporate these vital expressions with integrity, depth and full participation of the people.

Worship and congregational development topped the list of popular subjects for continuing education events, in the GBHEM study. The study revealed that Annual Conferences want “increasing effectiveness and vitality, spiritual formation, nurturing leaders, development of new skills and clarity in preaching and mission.”

McFee responds, “When leaders of worship take time apart for enhancing design and leadership skills in a context where the theological and spiritual aspects of worship leadership are woven into practical application, each one of these goals is addressed. As ‘Elevation’ inspires and equips leaders, it also nurtures a hunger for continued learning because there are so many emerging resources and ideas about worship.”

The study identified concern about the effectiveness of one-time continuing education events. To this end, “Elevation” includes ongoing learning through seasonal teleconferencing and internet resources based on the liturgical year. McFee explains: “One of the tenets I teach is ‘plan ahead.’ But worship is not the only thing that staff are responsible for in their ministry settings. I want to begin supporting busy clergy and lay worship planners with easy-to-access inspirational helps in jump-starting the creative process for a season as well as offer ways for participants to continue to resource each other.”

Completion of the “Elevation” schedule fulfills the requirements for 2.5 CEUs and includes significant time for spiritual renewal in the beauty of the Lake Tahoe region. A brochure and registration information are available for download at www.marciamcfee.com or by calling toll free 877-378-7977. Multiple registrants from a church receive discounts.

Historic religious properties in the Philadelphia area are getting a financial boost for restoration efforts. The Philadelphia Regional Fund for Sacred Places, administered by Partners for Sacred Places, is granting five awards totaling $400,000 to local congregations this fall.

Congregations must dedicate grant funds to the renovation of their older religious buildings. The urgent repairs include stabilizing falling spires, repairing crumbling walls, leaking roofs, and sagging windows, as well as upgrading life safety systems. Congregational leaders are announcing the awards in separate events within their churches.

The five Regional Fund grantees are:
- Arch Street United Methodist Church, Center City Philadelphia
- Church of the Advocate, North Philadelphia
- First United Methodist Church of Germantown, Northwest Philadelphia
- First Unitarian Church, Center City Philadelphia
- St. Mary’s Episcopal Church, Ardmore

Each congregation must match its grant by leveraging member and/or community support in order to receive the funding from Partners for Sacred Places’ Regional Fund.

“The Church of the Advocate’s mission to the community cannot be advanced without stewardship of its architecturally and socially significant buildings,” explains Church of the Advocate’s Development Director Barbara Steichert. “Partners for Sacred Places has offered us unscrewing support, guidance and friendship in the years since the restoration and building efforts have begun.”

“Partners is proud to extend the reach and impact of the Fund by helping these churches; each has enormous cultural and community value,” states A. Robert Jaeger, Executive Director of Partners for Sacred Places.

To apply to the Regional Fund, congregations must have a building of historical significance, strong and committed leadership, and a comprehensive plan to address their repair needs. Additionally, they must play a major role in neighborhood stabilization; combined, the five congregations provide space and other resources valued at about $939,500 annually to support the social services in their buildings.

The Philadelphia Regional Fund launched in May 2006, and is the largest fund of its type in the nation for funding and technical training for historic, community-serving sacred places. The William Penn Foundation and the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission are among the individuals, foundations, and governmental agencies providing support for the Regional Fund.

The program’s certified professor and on-site director is John Grigsby, an assistant professor of business administration at LVC. The LVC student volunteers trained for the program with students from Widener Law School and Shippensburg University. They completed a comprehensive training program and passed a grueling examination before they could be certified to assist taxpayers with federal, state, and local tax returns.

Grigsby and Shaylene Scheib of the Lebanon County United Way, who graduated from LVC last year, and Anthony Beeconne, a senior accounting student at LVC, were recently interviewed about the program by Comcast Newsmakers, a five-minute interview program airing on CNS'S Headline News that provides news and information from people making a difference. Their interview will be featured on numerous occasions beginning in the next week or so.

In addition to tax preparation, LVCIFL offers free e-File services for both federal and Pennsylvania tax returns, including direct deposit of refunds.

IRS Certifies Lebanon Valley College Volunteers to Offer Free Tax Return Help

Lebanon County taxpayers who need help with their federal, state, and local tax returns can get that help for free from certified, volunteer tax preparers at Lebanon Valley College, a United Methodist-related college in Annville, PA. Simply call 717-867-6044 for an appointment. On “Super Saturday”, April 12, walk-ins are welcome without an appointment from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. at LVC’s Faust Lounge in the Lund College Center. Twelve Lebanon Valley College student volunteers and one business faculty member have been certified by the Internal Revenue Service to provide these services.

The Lebanon Valley College Institute for Financial Literacy (LVCIFL) was created in the spring of 2007 to provide financial planning and counseling to residents of Lebanon County with low and moderate incomes. LVCIFL offers its services by appointment, generally on Tuesday and Thursdays throughout the tax season, as well as at other mutually agreeable times.

In the summer of 2007, LVCIFL entered into a partnership with the Community Action Commission in Harrisburg, the Lebanon County United Way, the Internal Revenue Service, and the Pennsylvania Department of Revenue to train students at various local colleges, universities, and law schools to provide free income tax services for low- and moderate-income taxpayers. It’s called the “Money in Your Pocket” program.

The program’s certified professor and on-site director is John Grigsby, an assistant professor of business administration at LVC. The LVC student volunteers trained for the program with students from Widener Law School and Shippensburg University. Celebrating 100 years of men’s ministry

The year 2008 marks the 100th anniversary of men’s ministry in The United Methodist Church, and celebrations are planned for General Conference when it meets in Fort Worth, TX in April, and in Annual Conferences across the United States.

The Eastern Pennsylvania Conference will celebrate the 100th anniversary at its 53rd Annual United Methodist Men Convocation, April 11-12, 2008. The convocation, with a theme of “Brothers in Prayer,” will be held at the Pocono Manor Inn.

Men’s ministry was a part of all of the predecessor denominations of The United Methodist Church. In 1928, at the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Baltimore, the Methodist Brotherhood was approved, making men’s ministry an official part of the denomination. Prior to 1928, more than 1,500 Methodist Episcopal churches had men’s ministry units under a variety of different names. Likewise, the United Brethren Church began making men’s ministry an official part of the denomination.

Today, the mission of the General Commission on United Methodist Men is to assist men to know Jesus Christ, to serve Him, to grow spiritually, and seek daily to do His will. Headquartered in Nashville, TN, about two blocks from the United Methodist General Board of Discipleship, the commission offers training and retreat opportunities, provides an online devotional and resource guide called Power Tools, supports the Upper Room Prayer Ministry, and works closely with Boy Scouts of America. It makes available Strength for Service devotional materials, which are given to armed services chaplains and personnel, as well as firefighters, police, and other public servants.

Across the United States, there are more than 250,000 United Methodist Men in 7,000 chartered units in local churches.

The 100th anniversary of United Methodist Men celebration includes special monthly observances for local units:

- April – United Methodist Men relationships with the other United Methodist Church agencies.
- May – Strength for Service: The commission has printed 250,000 copies of this World War II devotional, and has given them free of charge to U.S. military and community service personnel.
- June – Celebration of John Wesley’s birthday (June 17, 1703), the Holy Club, John Wesley Fellows and Band of Brothers.
- July – UMM working in the mission of the church, including hunger-relief efforts in conjunction with the Society of St. Andrew.
- August – Lifting up the men at the local level.
- September – Prayer Ministries: UMM gives an annual gift of $11,000 to The Upper Room Prayer Ministries.
- October – Expressing appreciation of pastors and bishops.
- November – Evangelism and spiritual life, mentoring relationships (especially the Amachi program), and providing Faith-Sharing New Testaments.
- December – Men’s Ministry Specialist, growing UMM on the local and conference levels with tangible goals, and Legacy Builders, a program that calls for men to step up to the plate in support of the missions and ministries of United Methodist Men.

The United Methodist Church encourages local churches to celebrate a Sunday during the year to recognize United Methodist Men and its ministries. A worship service and bulletin insert are available which you may use on this special day celebrating 100 years of men’s ministry.

Check the General Commission on United Methodist Men website for the 100th anniversary bulletin insert and other resources for men’s ministry in your church: www.gcummm.org. Also check the website for information on the upcoming 10th National Gathering of United Methodist Men which will be held July 10-12, 2009 at Belmont University, Nashville, Tennessee.

At least $5 from each ticket sold will benefit UMM Ministries. The UMM President of the Peninsula-Delaware Conference, Mr. Charles Brummel, will throw out the first pitch. Philadelphia Honors King Legacy with First-Ever Bridge Walk for Peace

On April 4, 1968 at precisely 6:01 PM Central Standard Time, an assassin’s bullet ended the life of Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., in Memphis, TN. But instead of ending a movement, the incident launched the legacy of Dr. King’s work for achieving peace throughout the world.

To commemorate the 40th Anniversary of the assassination, individuals and organizations were recruited to form a human chain in the shadow of the Benjamin Franklin Bridge to be in place at exactly 7:01 PM (the time that Dr. King was assassinated 40 years ago in Memphis, TN) honoring the ongoing need to connect to each other as we work toward peace throughout the world.

According to Rev. Dr. Donna L. Jones, pastor of Cookman United Methodist Church and one of the Bridge Walk’s organizers, the Walk is the first of several programs to be conducted over the course of the year that focuses on achieving the Beloved Community about which Dr. King spoke of, worked and died for.

“The concept of Beloved Community is one that influenced much of Dr. King’s work in which all of us would have enough and no one lives with too little,” Dr. Jones said. “If we work toward this goal of mutual respect, we could reduce the incidences of violence, poor education, limited job opportunities and military conflict that continue to plague our society.”

Participants gathered at Franklin Square Park at 6th & Arch at 3:00 PM to register for the Walk. A brief rally was be held at 3:50 with speakers that may include Mayor Michael Nutter of Philadelphia and Mayor Gwendolyn Faison of Camden, NJ and with individuals who worked and walked with Dr. King in his march for peace. Then the participants met near the Philadelphia side of the Ben Franklin Bridge to be in place at 7:01 PM (the time that Dr. King was assassinated), stretch their arms linking to one another and join in 40 seconds (one second for each year of the anniversary) honoring the work yet to be done in achieving the Beloved Community.

The event was supported by the Delaware River Port Authority and the City of Philadelphia.

Curriculum invites children to build ‘rock solid’ faith

by Kathy L. Gilbert

Hank the Hammer and friends will help children build a “rock solid heart of faith” with a new Sunday school curriculum being offered this fall by the United Methodist Publishing House.

“Rock Solid: Building a Heart of Faith” will invite children ages 3-13 to lay a solid biblical foundation and construct a personal relationship with God.

The cornerstone of “Rock Solid” is Matthew 7:24, the story of the wise man who built his house on rock. It includes multisensory activities, crafts, stories and games, supplemented by an interactive Web site at IAmRockSolid.com.

“Faith cannot be taught; it must be caught,” said Marj Pon, managing editor of church school publications, in a presentation to the Publishing House board of directors during its spring meeting March 18-19 in Nashville.

“We want to create a faith experience each week.”

The new curriculum replaces Exploring Faith, which has been offered for the past eight years. Rock Solid incorporates language based on a faith-building model instead of a school model and uses, for instance, words like session instead of lesson, leader instead of teacher and group instead of class.

The curriculum will be ready to ship to churches in June. It includes a leader guide, kids books, a resource packet and musical CD. A fun pack with craft ideas is available for younger age levels, a puzzle book for older children and a drama book for “tweens.”

Rock Solid is less expensive than Exploring Faith. The leader’s guide costs $2 less per book, and the kids book $1 less.

Reporting on other Publishing House products, Linda Tozer and Marilyn Thornton, editors of Vacation Bible School resources, said the 2008 VBS Beach Party had exceeded $1 million in sales during February. Walk It Out, a multicultural VBS offering, reached more than $70,000 in sales by the end of February and is running ahead of budget and sales of last year’s program.

“This was a first-time-ever achievement for the corresponding sales period and suggests we have a major hit on our hands,” said Neil Alexander, president and publisher, of the Beach Party product.

Competitive environment

In recent years, the Publishing House has faced tough competition in the publishing industry, in addition to soaring costs.

In July 2007, a 2 percent decline in annual sales forced the publishing agency to lay off 3 percent of its workforce. In February 2008, staff was restructured and leadership assignments changed to support a need for “bench strength” and a desire for a less hierarchical culture, Alexander said.

Second-quarter sales and expenses ended with a net operating revenue of $2.2 million, “which is well ahead of our plan,” Alexander said.

“We are grateful for this good news as it provides encouragement for the challenging work through the remainder of the fiscal year while we interact with an uncertain national economy and precarious small margin of error to achieve our end-of-year net operating revenue.”

Honoring the publisher

Alexander’s 20 years at the Publishing House was celebrated March 18 at a surprise banquet organized by staff and directors.

“Our products reach hundreds of thousands of people every week,” he said. “What is particularly gratifying is experiencing the depth of love of God and neighbor that motivates and sustains those involved.

From the Sunday school teachers to the worship planners, from editors to the Cokesbury store associates, there is a driving passion to share the Gospel of Jesus Christ with a sin-sick world.

“That’s made 20 years of this work challenging, exhilarating and profoundly satisfying.”
